This map displays the geographical distribution of pink circles across North America. The circles are most densely packed in the eastern United States, with significant concentrations in the Northeast (around New York City and Boston) and the Southeast (around Atlanta and the Florida peninsula). Smaller, more isolated circles are scattered across the western and central United States, as well as in Mexico and Central America. The map uses a light blue color for water bodies and a light beige color for landmasses. State and country boundaries are clearly marked with dashed lines. Major cities are labeled with red dots. The Bing logo is located in the bottom left corner.
